WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong Pacific low pressure trough is approaching Northern California. South-southwest winds ahead of the low are already locally gusty in wind-prone areas. Strong gusty winds (gusts 30-40 mph) will become more widespread along and east of the Cascade-Sierra Crest this afternoon. Light rain will move onshore from Sonoma County northward this afternoon, and spread east and south overnight. Thursday will be cool and cloudy with scattered light rain as the low moves over the Northern Operations Area. Light rain will finally move east of the Cascade-Sierra Crest during the afternoon hours on Thursday. Showers will gradually diminish Thursday night. Isolated embedded thunderstorms are also possible with this system. Rainfall totals will be 0.25- 0.50 inches in far Northwest California and just a trace to 0.20 inches elsewhere. On Friday the trough will become a closed low pressure area over Central California. High pressure and light offshore winds will develop over the Northern Operations Area through Sunday, bringing a warming and drying trend. This pattern does not look strong enough to be considered a High Risk situation. Isolated thunderstorms are possible over the Central Sierra Saturday and Sunday. A broad low pressure trough will move in with moderate westerly winds Monday and Tuesday. Light rain is possible again in far Northwest California with this system. Strong high pressure is expected to follow late in the week with a warming and drying trend, and a potential for moderate offshore winds.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

One last hot day can be expected over the state as high pressure over the Southwest gradually gives way to a trough over the Pacific Northwest. Temperatures will range from the 80s in the mountains above 6,000 feet to 105 in the valleys and lower foothills. An increase in low level moisture will allow for scattered wet thunderstorms to occur over the Angeles, San Bernardino and Cleveland National Forest to develop by noon today. Over the deserts, widespread thunderstorms will be possible, mainly south of I-15. The storms will be slow-moving and will be capable of producing heavy rainfall. Tonight, the trough will begin to ease into the area, which may produce local north winds of 15-25 mph along the south coast of Santa Barbara County. These winds will end shortly after sunrise. Thursday and Friday, much cooler weather will return due to onshore flow. Highs will be 10-15 degrees cooler over most regions outside the desert. Gusty winds up to 40 mph will be likely in the Banning Pass, Canyon Country and Antelope Valley Thursday afternoon. Over Southern California, only isolated storms are expected on Thursday, mainly over Imperial County. Meanwhile, a weak low pressure area will generate isolated showers and a few wet thunderstorms over the Sierras and Monterey County Thursday and Friday. Easterly winds may allow for a couple of storms to reach the Sierra Foothills Thursday afternoon. Isolated storms are expected to continue in the Sierras and northern Inyo National Forest over the weekend with mostly sunny skies and seasonal temperatures elsewhere. Next week, a very strong ridge may rebuild over the area, leading to another unwelcome stretch of hot weather.

- 2014-LAW-5797 09/15/14, 2100 hrs. AFRCC notified the Warning Center of a missing aircraft, Tail #N5948W, a white/blue Piper P28, with only the Pilot on board. The AFRCC elevated this to a Missing Aircraft due to family concerns. A CLETS message was issued by the W/C to all LE agencies along the known route. The aircraft was last known to have landed for fuel in Gustine, Merced County with an eventual destination of Lone Pine Airport, Inyo County. LDO contacted Gustine PD who conducted ramp checks with negative results, finding no evidence of the plane or pilot. AFRCC activated the Civil Air Patrol and began conducting cell phone forensics to better narrow down the location of the aircraft. Update: 9/16/14, 0123 hrs., Per AFRCC, CAP located a strong signal at coordinates 36 28 08N, 118 20 00W at an altitude of 10,700'. Due to darkness they are not able to clearly search the area so another aircraft will fly at first light. The coordinates provided by CAP plot to JNO Boreal Plateau in Sequoia & Kings Canyon Natl Park (Tulare County). LDO contacted SKC Natl Park who is aware of the ALNOT after receiving the CLETS message relayed from Tulare County SO. SKC will also be checking the area after first light in their aircraft. AFRCC advised. Update: Yosemite NPS located the pilot alive, although injured and arranged transport for him to a Fresno hospital. Mission Closed.
